It is the policy of Aiken Technical College to demonstrate a commitment to the principles of continuous improvement and engage in an ongoing and comprehensive researched-based evaluation process. The College will establish a comprehensive, systematic, and ongoing process of institutional effectiveness and research to collect, analyze, and act on data and information related to the goals and outcomes developed to support the College's mission and purpose.

The overall Institutional Effectiveness and Research (IER) process will include an ongoing planning-assessment-improvement cycle that is applied to educational and service and operation outcomes at each level within the college (institution, division, department, and program). The IER process will inform planning, decision-making, and resource allocation, as well as provide evidence to support assertions of quality and integrity in programs, services, and operations with respect to the mission in all aspects of the institution.
